

LESSONS FROM HISTORY

I was scrolling through YouTube the other day when a video from a channel's interview with an elderly man who was a survivor of the Auschwitz concentration camp came up.

It made me stop scrolling because he was young when he was there, and I had been thinking about it recently.

The old man described Auschwitz as a horrible place built by the Nazis. It terrified me.

The part that freaked me out the most was a doctor there, Josef Mengele.

I almost threw up when the video said that he tried changing his victims' eye colours by injecting them with dye.

It's scary how people could imagine these ways to torture others and, even worse, make them come true.

Learning about this piece of history was a heavy experience. Auschwitz is the ultimate example of bullying innocent people. The victims are asking the world to learn from their horror.

We must ensure that we never let such hatred grow around us again.
